PREFACE.

I have compiled this little book at the request of and for the service of several who share my admiration and affection for the Siamese Cat.

It contains, as far as I can trace, the names of all Siamese Cats that have appeared in all the Stud Books published by the National Cat Club, the Cat Club, and the Governing Council, and also from many old Show Catalogues and Registers, but as many of the old records are impossible to obtain, there will doubtless be many of the earlier Cats omitted, as I find cat records have not been as carefully preserved by Breeders and Exhibitors as they might have been or as is the case in other breeds of livestock.

My book, such as it is, is completed up to the end of April, 1924, and I am confident that none of the Breeders, Owners, and Exhibitors who consult its pages will cavil at the few errors or omissions that may be found in what is but an earnest endeavour to give them useful information in a compact and convenient form, thus saving them time and trouble and contributing, however humbly, to the interests of the Siamese Cat.

I should be grateful to the readers if they would kindly oblige me by drawing attention to any errors or omissions in this book, so that the necessary corrections can be made in a second edition, if called for.

I have to thank Miss Busted, Mrs. Kennaway, Miss H. Lea, Mrs. Scott Russell, and Mr. Sam Woodiwiss for their great help in furnishing me with books, registers, catalogues, etc., which have been of great assistance to me and without which I could not have completed this work; also to many Breeders who have so kindly given me records of their cats.

INTRODUCTION.

Of all breeds of Cats there is none that has so many endearing characteristics as the Siamese, with its graceful formation, unique colouring, brilliant blue eyes, wonderful instinct, and almost human affection.

The head is decidedly longer and more pointed than that of the ordinary domestic cat, the eyes more slanting towards the nose, typical of its Eastern origin. The form is slender and graceful, body rather long, set on legs proportionately slight, with oval feet; tail thin and tapering. The coat should be soft and silky, decidedly close lying, of a uniform cream colour, with mask, legs, feet, and tail of a dark and clearly-defined shade of seal brown.

According to a well-known authority, these Cats are looked upon with reverence by the people of Siam, being believers in the doctrine of the transmigration of souls; and according to an ancient legend nothing harmful can happen to people when travelling if they have one of these sacred cats with them.

The idea that Siamese Cats are carefully guarded and bred in the Royal palace at Bangkok nowadays has been absolutely denied by certain people who have been in positions of authority at Bangkok, who also state that the breed is rare in any part of the country, even in and around Bangkok. They appear to have been in England for many years now, but, according to Mr. Harrison Weir, the number exhibited at the Crystal Palace Shows between the years 1871 and 1887 was fifteen females and only four male, some of which were neuters.

Amongst some of the earliest Breeders and Exhibitors in England might be mentioned Lady Dorothy Nevill, the late Duke of Wellington, Mrs. Scott, of Rotherfield, Mr. Young, of Harrogate, Mrs. Brennand, Lady Vyvyan, Miss Forestier Walker, and Mrs. Lee, of Penshurst.

The Siamese Cat Club for the protection and improvement of the breed appears to have been formed in Oct., 1901, from which date it has continued to look after the interests of the breed, and at the time of writing is in a most flourishing condition, having a membership of seventy-five. The following article, culled from "Our Cats" of July 24th, 1909, appears to me to be of such great interest to all lovers of Siamese Cats that I herewith reprint it for the benefit of those who may never have had a previous opportunity of seeing it.

THE SIAMESE TEMPLE CAT.

By H. D. Bassett.

A visitor to the temples in Siam and Anam occasionally sees a seal-coloured cat with blue eyes therein, and on inquiry will be told that the "hao mao" (pretty cat) belongs there. If that does not satisfy him the bonze (priest) becomes very vague in his replies, and the visitor gives up the attempt of extracting information, setting the bonze down as stupid. He is not stupid at all, but not desiring to talk about the cat and at the same time desirous to show the visitor every courtesy (at a price) he changes the subject. The writer studied and questioned without avail all of the bonzes with whom he came in contact, and also sought information from the people, but while admitting that the cat was of some use in their religious ceremonies they declined to state anything else. That the Temple Cat does enter into their religious ceremonies I am quite convinced, and this is especially the case with the black ones. These I have seen on two occasions enclosed in gilded cages with incense burning in front of them and with offerings of food placed before their domiciles. Among the Anamites the cat is regarded with great affection, and is guarded as being of great value. No woman's jewellery is more carefully guarded than is her cat. I once made an aged bonze an offer for a huge black specimen which was contentedly reposing on a cushion in a very richly-ornamented cage, and was very severely shunned by himself and his fellows, besides being an object of suspicion all the time that I remained in the Temple.

In the coast cities there are any number of so-called Siamese Cats, which are in reality genuine Siamese Cats, but they are of a mongrel breed and generally distinguished by some imperfection of either colour or mal-formation of the body. These seem to have come into view about the time of the Boxer trouble, and are undoubtedly the result of the mixing of the Temple Cat with the common cat which is found all over China. The breed is very quickly discovered, as the results of the cross are not happy ones, the progeny being distinguished by deformed tails, short hooks, bad eyes, poor markings, and other disfigurements too numerous to mention. These are the cats which are very frequently shown in the exhibitions and are always the ones which are carried away from Cochin-China. There are at the present time but three genuine Siamese Temple Cats on record that are of the pure Royal Temple strain. In fact, as far as the principal line is concerned, they are the only ones living. Two of them, I am informed, are in the possession of the King of Belgium; the other, a male, is owned by Madame Blanche Arral. Mr. John D. Archbold owned one, but I am informed, that it is dead.

The present King of Siam presented Madame Arral with a beautiful pair from the Royal Temple. These had kittens, and it was from them that the pair were raised which were sent by the writer to the Exposition at Liege, Belgium, where they were sold, so I am informed, for six thousand francs. There were two sent to the Zoological Gardens at Sydney, Australia, but they have since died, and a third sent to New York for Mr. Archbold. While still in the East (I spent several years there) the entire line of Royal Temple Cats, together with the Temple, was destroyed by a typhoon which partially wrecked the towns all along the coast of China. Cochin China especially suffered. Undoubtedly there were cats taken from other temples to replace the ones killed, but of the old Royal lines only the three I mention are alive.

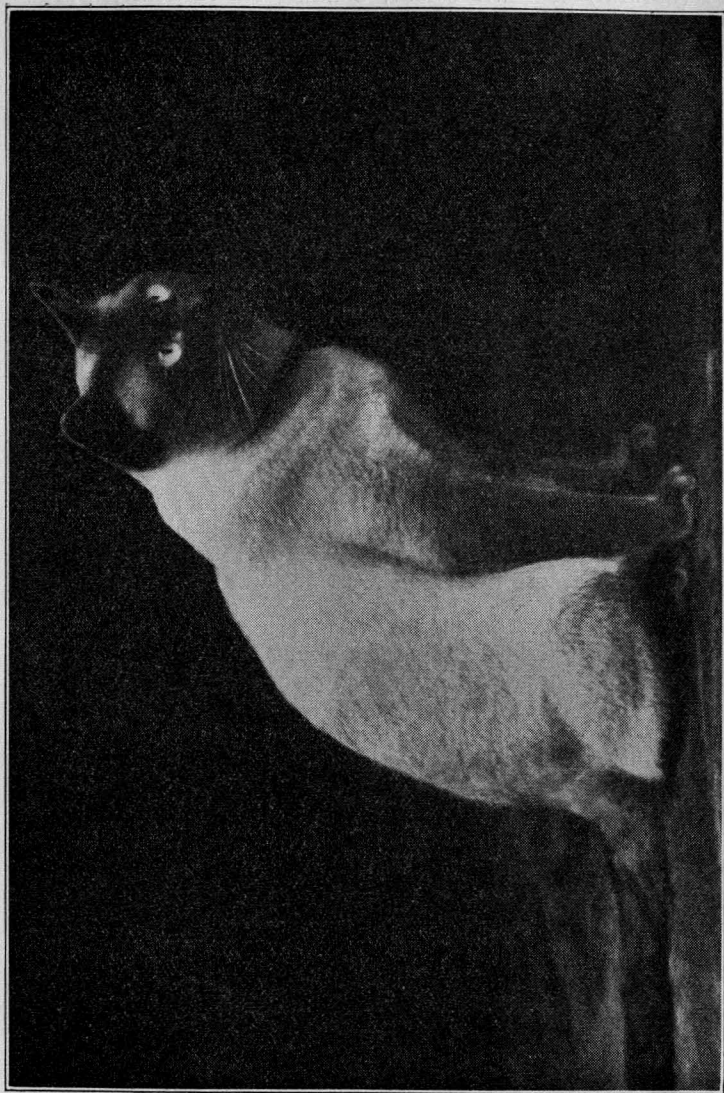

The Siamese Temple Cat differs from the common or garden variety in the same manner as a thoroughbred race-horse differs from the wild horse of the prairies. The Temple Cat is the outcome of long years of careful breeding and anxious care. He is very fragile when taken from the temples, and for that reason is very difficult to raise. Out of ten kittens, in the same climate, I have only been able to raise two, and that was a big average. It is extremely advisable not to inbreed, as doing so destroys the colour of the eyes and also mottles the fur.

The pure race is born white with no markings at all; as they grow older they begin to show on their feet, tail, ears, and face a slight colour, which gradually deepens until it is decidedly shown. This "colour" is really no colour, but a smudge, looking like as if the kitten was dirty. These markings gradually change to a brown, which gradually grow darker until the points mentioned, feet, ears, face, and tail are of a very decided brown colour, which grows deeper with age until at maturity the shade is deep chocolate or burnt umber. The body at about six months commences to change from white to a light seal colour until as the cat increases in age the entire body is of a beautiful seal (natural) or fawn colour, shading off to nearly pure white on the belly. This colour deepens with age, but always retains its tonal characteristics—i.e., the parts which are dark deepen in shade as the lighter colours become darker. There are nine points which always are to be noted. Four feet, two ears, tail, face and a patch between the shoulder blades these are always strongly identified, and any deviation is sure to show a bad streak in the line. The eyes are of a beautiful azure, generally darker in the females than in the males. The tail is long and lithe and pointed. Any specimen having a knob, kink, or imperfection in this respect shows that there has been a cross with the common strain, and should be destroyed, as it is absolutely useless for breeding purposes. The body is like that of a tiger, and in walking the cat exhibits the same gliding lurching gait as that animal. The body sinks down between the shoulders, and the hind legs are let down until the cat rests on its hocks. I believe that this is a characteristic of the race which remains from his savage ancestor. From specimens of the jungle or wild cat which I have found I am inclined to the belief that the Temple Cat owes his existence to them, probably being domesticated in the Temples and thus losing his more pronounced stripes and body markings.

My experience, extending over seven years, has proven one very extraordinary thing. In about every fifth generation there will be found a black kitten, and in every case it is a male. I have never known this to fail. Coal black from top to tip, with eyes of a deep golden colour, not yellow, but more of the orange colour. His get are normal, and I believe that this is the reason that the colour remains with the breed in the Temples. (I have seen a great many specimens of the Siamese Temple Cats which have been raised in confinement, and they have all shown decided white tendencies.) Only one (black) have I been able to raise, and unfortunately he was killed after fathering two litters of kittens. I have seen two, however, in the Temples, and they were of extraordinary size.

The race is of exceptional intelligence, and if taken young can be taught the usual tricks acquired by a pet terrier. The male in possession of Madame Arral retrieves like a spaniel, but not in water; at Sydney they had a male which sat up, shook hands, and performed various tricks. Of affectionate nature, they will follow one around like a dog, and make very companionable pets.
